AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND

EXPLORE THE HISTORY OF THE CREATION OF NEW ZEALAND

Maori culture is essentially based on oral traditions that have passed down history, legends and values over the millennia.

One of them tells the story of how the North Island and the South Island were created.

Maui, the demigod who tamed the sun and gave mankind fire, had four brothers.

One day, he overheard them preparing to go fishing at sea without him. Not wanting to be left on land alone by his brothers, Maui hid in his brothers' canoe. He waited until they were far enough out to sea to emerge from his hiding place. So he could start fishing with his brothers.

Maui had made himself a fishing hook from the magic jawbone of an ancestor. He threw the magic hook and after a short time, got a bite that seemed to be quite big. With the help of his brothers, he gently brought his catch up from the depths. To everyone's surprise, they had caught a gigantic fish: Te Ika a Maui (Maui's fish) known today as the North Island.

Maui then proceeded to thank Tangaroa, the god of the oceans, for this exceptional new catch, but before he could finish his prayer, his brothers cut off parts of it, creating the valleys, mountains and lakes that can still be admired on North Island today.

The five brothers left their canoe next to the giant fish: this is Te Waka on Maui (Maui's Canoe), now known as South Island. It is said that the Kaikoura Peninsula, on the west coast of the island, is the site of the canoe's headquarters, where Maui stood to reel in his catch. The canoe's anchor, "Punga a Maui", became Stewart Island-Rakiura.

Many diseases and conditions are spread by not washing hands with soap and clean, running water. Alcohol-based hand sanitizers can quickly reduce the number of germs on hands.
