SEMARANG, JAVA, INDONESIA

INDONESIA - AN ARCHIPELAGO OF 17,508 ISLANDS AND A LANGUAGE RICH IN HISTORY

The island of Java is home to a large number of ethnic groups, all of whom have preserved the richness of their language, while also speaking the country's official language: Indonesian.

Basa Jawa or Javanese is the language of the Javanese ethnic people. But unlike most other languages, there is not one, but three very distinct Javanese dialects, the use of which is highly codified: Kromo, Madhjo and Nyoko.

The idiom to be used is dictated by the age and social background of each speaker. For example, when speaking to someone important - or more important than oneself - or when you want to show appreciation to the other person, you use Kromo, the High Javanese or court language used to express deference and respect. To express yourself as an equal, you use Madhjo and to speak to someone of lower rank, you use the popular language, Nyoko.

Complicated? Indeed, but the complexity of Basa Jawa does not stop there. Because this triple language also has variants depending on the region of the island where the speakers live: Basa-Dalam in the central regions of the island, Basa-Luar for the coastal dialect and in the western mountains, Soenda, which is even an independent idiom of Javanese.

Conjugation? Piece of cake... As the language has neither article nor gender and only two numbers, conjugation logically makes no distinction between numbers or persons, and to top it all off, the same word can be both verb and noun. Add to this the fact that words that can be combined to form compound words undergo transformations that make them unrecognisable, and you have a language that is fascinating for a linguist to study, but that would give any language student terrible nightmares.

The icing on the cake? Javanese uses an alphabet derived from an ancient Indian alphabet. And if you're wondering whether this rich language has anything to do with computer languages, you should know that it does not. The Java language was named by its creators in reference to... coffee, java being the nickname sometimes given to a cup of coffee in the United States.

PIANIST WITH THE HAIR

TONIGHT'S SHOW WITH JULIAN GARGIULO

▶ AT 6:30PM
THE SHOW LOUNGE, DECK 6

Julian Gargiulo is a pianist, composer, and Steinway Artist. He performs regularly in Carnegie Hall, United Nations, Moscow Conservatory Hall, Symphony Stage in Singapore, and Seymour Theatre in Sydney, and has been featured on Radio and TV stations in North America, Europe, and Asia. A classically trained pianist, Julian captivates his audience not only with his technical precision but with his Jerry Seinfeld-ish wit as well. On stage he presents a program which includes classical standards, Tango transcriptions, as well as his own compositions. In between pieces he engages the audience by sharing his personal stories, anecdotes from the lives of composers, and his home remedies for jet-lag.

In 2015 Julian presented the first edition of 'Getting to Carnegie', an International Music Competition which offers musicians from all around the world a chance to share the stage at Carnegie Hall. In 2020 Julian and his wife Elektra started a New Music Series called "One Classical Minute" (www.oneclassicalminute.com) described as "High Culture in Low Doses" for everything you never wanted to know about classical music, and never bothered to ask. Julian splits his time between New York and Paris. More info at: www.pianistwiththehair.com

"Saturday Night Live meets Carnegie Hall" (Huffington Post)

"Expect to revise any preconceived notions you have about classical music concerts." (Huffington Post)

"He's the only classical musician I know who could truly be regarded as a rock star as well." (The Courier Mail)

"He was in town last night... he's just brilliant... there are not enough words to describe the genius behind him... because when he sits down and plays you are watching a Beethoven or Chopin... years from now your grandkids and great-grandkids will be talking about Julian. He's just magnificent." (ABC TV)
